Time pressed, and it was impossible to obtain more than 7,000 france in gold at that hour. The police arranged that Simone was to set out, lest the brigands had set a spy on his movements, but that at a certain spot a faithful servant was to take his place and the money and proceed to the rendezvous, followed as a short distance by a picket of carabineers.

When the servant arrived at the spointed place his uppearance aroused the suspictions of the brig ands, but he played his part so well that his gained time for the soldiers to come up.

The latter up soomer issued from the sladow of the trees than they were received by a lively fire from the brigands. Without reclying to the fusillade, however, for our of hitting the servant or the two captives, the carabineers courageously advanced. Their brigadier was wounded in the log and a desperate stimulation and the supplier of the brigands, who were well acquainted with the ground, finally sacaped, leaving the captives behind them.
